High-level players. Organized games. Real community. That’s 21FC.

The above are the typefaces that 21FC uses in all communications. Both Red Hat Display and Bangers are Open Source, and Black Rusher is a commercially available typeface. Red Hat Display contains many type weights, and is used to display factual information. Bangers and Black Rusher are display Typefaces suitable for headlines and accents.

The Red Hat Display typeface is an open source, geometric sans-serif font designed for the Red Hat brand identity.

- Geometric Sans-Serif: It is classified as a geometric sans-serif typeface, meaning its letterforms are based on geometric shapes with generally even strokes.
- Designed for Display: The name "Display" indicates that it is optimized for use at large sizes, such as headlines, banners, and logos, where it can "grab attention".
- Designer & Origin: The font was commissioned by Paula Scher of the design firm Pentagram and designed by Jeremy Mickel of MCKL type foundry as part of Red Hat's 2019 brand refresh.
- Open Source: In keeping with the company's philosophy, the entire Red Hat font family (Display, Text, and Mono) is open source and available for free download and use under the SIL Open Font License.
- Design Inspiration: Its design is a fresh take on the genre, drawing inspiration from classic American sans-serif typefaces like Tempo and Highway Gothic.
- Distinctive Features: It features a tall x-height, open counters (the enclosed white space in letters like 'o' or 'p'), and tight spacing to give it brand personality.
- Variable Font: The typeface was updated in 2021 to a variable font, which allows for a versatile and continuous range of weights (from light to bold) rather than fixed specific weights.
- Part of a Family: It is part of a larger typeface superfamily that includes Red Hat Text (optimized for smaller paragraph text) and Red Hat Mono (a monospaced font for code snippets).
